Armstrong celebrates 'Quality Performance'

Armstrong Furniture, a division of Thomasville Furniture Industries, Inc., celebrated Quality Performance Day last Monday, Oct. 8.

The day was both festive and serious, as employees were presented a special program which offically "kicked-off" their Quality Management process, a process which defines quality as "conformance to requirements." The program was given three times on Monday to accomodate employees on all three shifts.

The purpose of Quality Performance Day was to let all Armstrong Furniture employees realize, through a personal experience, that there's been a change within the company. Employees were asked to commit themselves to doing their jobs right the first time and every time. In turn, management made the commitment to help employees do their jobs right, by removing obstacles, solving aggravating problems, and working with employees to prevent problems from happening.

The company provided a meal for all employees to thank them for their contributions to the company's success and for the importance employees place on doing their jobs right.
